

What Does CATA Do?

As a membership organization, an important part of CATA's mission is to grow in membership, thereby providing the opportunity to participate to all who are interested.

Regular meetings among migrant and farmworker members are held to plan activities in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Maryland. Over the past several years, much of the energy and dedication of these councils has been focused on working towards immigration reform.

In addition to the decisions made by these groups on what they want to work on, we regularly do a number of workshops in the community and on farm labor camps. These workshops are on a number of topics, including:

- Pesticides
- Workers' Rights
- Immigration
- Organic Agriculture
- HIV and Sexual Health

And More!

What is CATA?

Our organization - CATA - The Farmworkers' Support Committee was founded by migrant farmworkers in Southern New Jersey in 1979.

We are a membership organization open to all farmworker and immigrant men and women in the community who are interested in fighting for their rights.

The mission of CATA is to educate workers about their rights and support them as they develop and exercise leadership skills in order to create a better life for themselves and their communities.

CATA is an organization that believes workers can fight the injustices that they find in their places of work, in their homes, and in their communities.

Who are We?

CATA's membership is located in Southern New Jersey, Southeastern Pennsylvania, and in the area of Salisbury, Maryland. Together, we work daily to confront the realities faced by immigrant workers and struggle to improve the conditions of our lives as a united collective.
